The concertino group of Bach's fourth Brandenburg Concerto in G major, BWV consists of a violono principale and due fiauti d'echo with ripieno strings. Far more recorders survive from the Renaissance than from the Middle Ages.

At the most basic level, the sequential uncovering of finger holes increases. During the baroque period, the recorder was traditionally associated with pastoral scenes, miraculous events, funerals, marriages, and amorous scenes. Now, we are proud to present the first

The interactive, online audio interface includes: tempo control; looping; of the written and spoken words of Bill Evans reveals a profound musical mind.
