Recent historians, however, have taken a more complicated view of Elizabeth. Speaking of the Moor. Elizabeth's first governess Margaret Bryan wrote that she was "as toward a child and as gentle of conditions as ever I knew any in my life". This biography also reflects more critical voices, such as those of the Irish. It felt like night. As she grew older, even Catholic courtiers noted Elizabeth resembled her father more than Mary did. He was interrupted by her undoing his belt and pulling down his trousers and shorts. She was also excessively vain, and owned three thousand dresses, many richly. Philip was equally determined to go.
