But, like Italian humanists, he personally preferred a republic to a monarchy. Accordingly because it is necessary both for our dullness and for our arrogancethe Lord has provided us with a written law to give us a clearer witness of what was too obscure in the natural law, shake off our listlessness, and strike more vigorously our mind and memory. DotheGospelsBorrowfromPaganMyths? Jerome Zanchius. The punitive function of the law in its work upon believers and unbelievers.

TheLordbewithyou!ThankYouforYourContribution!McGrath notes that while Martin Bucer suggested that justification causes moral regeneration, Calvin argued that "both justification and regeneration are the results of the believer's union with Christ through faith. But it should be kept in mind that as a humanist and a rhetorician Calvin was less concerned to be theologically precise than to impress his audience with the need to repent of its sins.
